

I.

It all started with a viral video parents and grandparents would send each other on WhatsApp and Facebook. It looked way too History Channel to be taken seriously: "Time Explained". But indeed that it did.

Soon, an amateur archaeologist named Thimoté Rodríguez-Ólafsson got a hold of the video (his grandfather was obsessed with all things extraterrestrial). Initially reluctant, but increasingly interested Thimoté realised there was nothing fake or AI-generated about that video. The relics had to be real. The excavation site ought to be authentic. This would answer all the questions Humanity had ever had. The mystery of time had truly been unearthed. And in his city of all places! Thimotée put on his warmest clothes, stuffed what he could in his backpack, and left. He would buy something to eat on the train. He just had to leave. Something propelled him. The all-pervasive feeling that he was about to become part of History, of the biggest schism in the history of Human History.

He
